DOC students had the unique experience of collaborating with Oxford University students in England through the magic of technology. Bryonn Bain, Associate Professor for UCLA's Department of African American Studies and Department of World Arts and Cultures/Dance and Kennedy Center fellow is a frequent collaborator with the DC DOC's division of College and Career Readiness. Currently serving as a fellow at Oxford University, Professor Bain combined two classes across the sea to explore poetry as a form of social awareness. The students from both institutions worked together to create a community poem.
